

Motivational Map Profile for

M Map

Purposeful ■
Innovative ■
Commercial ■

15 June 2026

Switch Performance Ltd

Contents

Introduction	3
The Nine Motivations Of Work	4
Executive Summary	5
Your Personal Profile	6
Summary of Your Motivators	6
Range of Scores	6
Your Primary Motivator	7
Your Second Motivator	8
Your Third Motivator	9
Your Lowest Motivator	10
Personal Motivation	11
Your Current Level of Motivation	11
Satisfaction of Your Top Three Motivators	11
Your Motivational Action Plan	12

Introduction

Your happiness and success at work is partly determined by whether or not your core 'motivations' are being met. These Motivations are not a conscious decision, but rather emerge from your self-concept, beliefs, expectations and personality. As with our purpose in life, we do not 'invent' motivations; instead, we detect them. It is vital to go with the grain of our Motivations.

This Motivational Map Profile is based on your responses to the Motivational Map Questionnaire which was completed on 15 June 2026.

The origins of the Motivational Map are based on extensive research into human motivation using three primary sources; Abraham Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs, Edgar Scheins Career Anchors and the personality profiling tool the Enneagram.

The Motivational Map comprises three cluster areas, with each of these containing three core motivations. This means that in total, there are nine core Motivations.

Usually three of these predominate, although sometimes this can vary - two may stand out, or more than three can emerge. Within your dominant three, there is one core Motivation - your work must fulfil this Motivation if there is to be any real satisfaction. It is important to identify your Motivations and to work consistently at getting more of them at the workplace. However, it is also highly likely that what you want from work, you also want from the rest of your life as well. Thus it is why examining your Motivations is of fundamental importance.

The Nine Motivations Of Work

The Nine motivators sit within the three cluster groups, as shown in the diagram below:

These are broad groupings and are not water-tight. For example, the Expert does not necessarily have to be 'expert' solely at work - though this is where the general focus is. Clearly, it is 'easier' in some senses to obtain satisfaction from work where the Motivations are all Achievement orientated: after all, work in most places is designed to produce money (the Builder), power (the Director) and expertise (the Expert); obtaining friendship (the Friend), say, or meaning (the Searcher) is usually more problematic! The challenge for all bosses is to produce the possibility of motivating in all nine areas for all their staff.

Executive Summary

The Absolute Strength chart measures how important each motivator cluster is set against the other two. Looking at this chart should give you a good idea of what is really important to you about being motivated at work. If the distribution of the three colours is pretty even, then you are pretty balanced: you get motivated at work through Relationships through Achievements and through personal Growth probably in equal measure.

When looking at this chart consider:

- Does one dominate?
- Is one especially weak?
- Is there a balance?

Your Dominant Cluster is: Growth

This means that your motivations primarily come from realising your full potential and being all you can be. This realisation means a new 'you' comes into being – and new involves creative change – and you want to create that change in defined areas of your work and life. Further, for this to be possible, freedom and purpose are usually essential. You prefer, then, living in the future. With such a “growth” focus, however, it can be very self-absorbing; so, are you missing out on sustainable relationships? By focusing on change and being involved with new things, on your freedom and your purposes, do you fail to finish or follow through on existing projects or in important relationships?

Your Personal Profile

The bar chart below shows, in rank order, all of your nine motivators and the strength of your Motivators measured against each other.

- A score of 30+ is a 'spike' - an extremely strong motivator
- A score of 10 or less indicates an "inverse spike" – a weak motivator
- A score of below 5 can indicate some discomfort towards that to the Motivator where it is dominant in others

Bear in mind at all times: there is no 'better' or 'worse' Motivator or motivational score - only differences and fitness for purpose. Lower scores that are clustered together suggest balance; spikes suggest extremes. Fitness for purpose determines what might be better in a given situation. Consult your practitioner for more information about this.

Range of Scores

The range of scores for the nine motivators provides more insight into your core motivations. The range is the difference between the highest and lowest motivational score. An average range for an individual is 8 points; however some people may have a larger range, which indicates more focus. Others may have a smaller range which indicates they are more balanced.

Your range of scores is 24 which indicates that you are totally focused in what motivates you, and satisfying your motivators above 30 points is essential if you are to be productive at work.

Your Primary Motivator

The Searcher

- Purposeful
- Feedback-orientated
- Quality critical

As a Searcher, your need is for meaning. The search for meaning suggests that what you want to do is or are things which are valuable for their own sake. You want to do activities that you believe in. This means that the things you do need to be important to you – not just because they make money or give status. You have to see the work as important and significant in its own right. Thus, should your activities become increasingly paper driven, this will seriously de-motivate you. Fundamentally, the searcher seeks to make a difference – to the quality of work and life. And it means one is looking for something ‘better’ – maybe, a ‘cause’ – than what one has now.

Searcher is your highest score, so you are good at identifying your own values – and looking for work that will enable you to embody them. You really want to contribute – and improve life’s quality. The quest for meaning tends to make you insatiably curious - you want to see a bigger picture in the world and to go on questing for more information and ideas.

Here are some strategies you could use to improve or help to maintain your current levels of motivation:

Be clear about your mission in life. Ask before formulating your mission: what do you want to do before you die? What do you never want to do again? What do you want to offer and contribute? How do you want to change, develop and grow?

Actively seek out positive, quality feedback. You thrive on feedback, so make sure you get some, and don’t overlook social media.

Identify your core values and reward yourself when you consciously realise one of them.

Your Second Motivator

The Creator

- Innovative
- Solution-orientated
- Cutting-edge

As a Creator, your need is for creativity. This motivation is for innovation and to be identified with original output. In other words, you want your name on ... the book, the CD, the product or even the service. You are somebody who breaks barriers – brings into existence what wasn't there before. So problems, challenges and the 'new' bring out the best in you and are highly motivating – solutions mean innovations. You tend to be optimistic and can persevere in adversity. Because you solve problems, you like and feel the need for play - there is a special 'play' buzz that people get who are creative. You want that buzz in your work - if it's not there, you're not happy.

Here are some strategies you could use to improve or help to maintain your current levels of motivation:

Take a 'sabbatical' – one hour ...to ... one year – and do something entirely different. Re-charge and replenish your personal batteries.

Volunteer to be involved in any fresh initiative – you thrive on new challenges because it provides an opportunity to provide creative solutions.

Use Mind-storming to solve problems. Formulate a specific question which stimulates the imagination: e.g. "How can I become physically fitter in the next 6 months?" Write down 20 answers! This can lead to insights and solutions.

Your Third Motivator

The Builder

- Commercial
- Goal-orientated
- Competitive

As a Builder, your need is for material satisfactions, money and a high standard of living. High here means above the average – you tend to compare yourself with what others have got and want more. Decisions you make will be geared towards achieving more material success. For you money is a driver, and in its extreme form becomes the pursuit of wealth. This will mean you are fascinated by possessions and clothes and will spend much time reviewing your investments and worth, and all financial areas of your life. For you, therefore, a pay rise, bonus or performance-related pay is highly motivating – and so is promotion but only if it leads to more pay.

Here are some strategies you could use to improve or help to maintain your current levels of motivation:

Make promotion a key strategy for increasing your wealth – what do you need to do to be promoted? But keep in mind, too, promotion is not good if you end up doing a job that seriously stresses you.

Remember: to earn more, learn more! Enrol on relevant training even if you have to fund it yourself.

Set clear goals and link them to rewards, especially financial ones. Make sure you include the targets along the way and, crucially, the next action steps.

Your Lowest Motivator

The Expert

- Insightful
- Learning-orientated
- Knowledgeable

Expert is your lowest score, so becoming an 'expert' is not especially important to you – training and development is seen in a more functional way – what outcome will it lead to for me in another area? – and you may find that you either distrust experts or regard them with some contempt – beware of this! Learning is essential for all your future development. Make an effort to review what learning lies ahead for you over the next eighteen months. Ask, what one area of expertise, if I really knew about it, would make a profound difference to my career or my next step? Reflect on this question.

Why the lowest motivator is important

Your lowest motivational score can be very revealing. The top three scores are more exciting, but noting our lowest motivator can also give useful clues about improving our motivation and our life.

First, ask the question: is my lowest motivator causing me a problem? We sometimes call this a hygiene factor, which means that the motivator does not motivate us, but its absence can lead to de-motivation. For example, imagine you are a manager, and Director is your lowest motivator – might that be a problem – needing but not wanting, to manage?

Secondly, the lowest motivator may also re-enforce all or one of your top three motivators. We call this polarity reinforcement. For example, the Creator is very change friendly – on the other hand, the Defender is change-averse. If your top motivator is Creator and your bottom is Defender you will be even more change friendly, than if you simply had Creator as number one.

Thirdly, your lowest motivator can affect how you feel about others. For example, if your lowest motivator is Star, and you are working with someone whose top motivator is Star, then it is highly likely, especially in the absence of one or two shared motivators, that you will find their 'attention' seeking behaviour, as you see and define it, extremely irritating.

Fortunately, the shared language of Motivational Maps can provide an escape route from conflict, as can the development of your self-awareness as you scan your Map!

Your Current Level Of Motivation

The Personal Motivation Audit represents the extent to which you feel your top three motivators are currently being satisfied. Whilst this score can be dependent upon specific factors affecting you during the time you completed the questionnaire, it gives you a good indication of your current levels of motivation and enables you to identify the areas you will need to focus on to improve levels of motivation.

The diagram below shows the four quadrants relating to the % score for the personal motivation audit. These quadrants will help you to identify the type of action that is needed and possibly the speed of that action, to help you improve or maintain your levels of motivation.

You are currently 84% motivated in your current role. This means that you have an optimum level of motivation and basically you are happy and well motivated in your current role. The challenge for you is staying at and maintaining this level and continuing to be so motivated.

This score does not imply any judgement of you – be clear that motivation is independent of your personal skill set. The aim of this score is to support you in enhancing your motivation.

The graph below shows, on a scale of 1 (low) to 10 (high) the extent to which your top three motivators are being achieved as follows;

Satisfaction of Top 3 Motivators

Your Motivational Action Plan

When you have had the opportunity to consider this report and/or discuss it with others, think about some actions you could take to help improve your levels of motivation. Look closely at the Motivation Strategies suggested with your top three motivators. Then, use this page to write down your goals, and some actions you are going to start taking to help improve or maintain your current levels of motivation.

My Goals

What will I do?

How will I do it?

When will I do it?